At Home.

On Friday the 7th, the residence of Mrs. J. C. J. King, was open to the reception of visitors, the occasion being the presentation of her daughter, Miss Rosa King, and a compliment to her charming guest, Miss Linda White, of Dallas. The handsome home, exceptionally well calculated for entertaining as it is, was richly adorned, and the hostess dispensed courtesies, which gave to all the ease and enjoyment of the "at home" feeling which is the central sun of hospitality. Miss King was never more attractive than on this the evening of her debut. A maiden sweet and coy, it seemed fitting that the home should wear garlands of mistletoe and flowers as white as the foam; that pearls and snow colored draperies, emblems of purity, should deck one who will enliven society with her many intellectual and personal charms. In receiving her guests Mrs. King was ably assisted by Miss King, Miss Linda White and Mesdames Dickenson, Walker and Storey. The enjoyment of the evening was a complement to the entertainers which they each richly merited. The refreshments were elaborate and beautifully served, beginning with the bivalves and terminating with that "food" which has borrowed its name from an angel and has a lovely lassic, if not an ethereal one, to serve it. The lengthened shadows marked the verging line between the afternoon reception devoted to ladies and the later hours in which the gentlemen were allowed to call. This permission was greatly appreciated and caused a rise in the barometer of masculine hopes. The season has furnished a number of entertainments from which the gentlemen have been excluded, and they seemed all the more to enjoy a reinstatement that had for its accompaniment of youth, beauty, flowers, mirth and a prevailing hospitality that chased the hours away and made them feel the night is good since all were slow to say good-night.

AFTERNOON NOTES.
